CNBC might be saying that the selling is over, but...

Just as a sample of some of the insightful material that you can get – for FREE, as well as in the Members Area – here's a look at an article that was posted on our "Ears on the Markets" blog yesterday... CNBC might have figured that the selling was over yesterday, but by looking at the charts, we knew better, and as we've seen the markets in fact CRASHED intraday today, with the Dow having lost as much as 1020 points, at one point today. So take a look at this prelude to the article and continue reading it at our blog...

You know, I rarely watch CNBC. I mean, let's be honest, probably the only thing that group is good for is, perhaps for being the preeminent contrary indicator, if you will, when it comes to calling significant turns in the markets.

But for some reason, I decided to turn on the channel a few times today, for several minutes on each occasion, just to get a feel of what the sentiment was like in the, oh let's call it the "fundamentals" crowd...

Almost on every occasion, I heard what can only be described as full on cheerleading for a bounce. Several times in the last hour or two, they repeated a seemingly nonsensical claim that went along the lines of "oh, look, the Dow has bounced 20/30/40 points, off its intraday lows (when the index was down 125 points, on top of yesterday's 225-pt drop) and, since every correction over the past several months has ended fairly quickly, this one must be over - given that the indices have been able to hold the day's lows - now."
